

The Government may want older people to keep working but the message isn't getting through to employers

Courier-Mail 9 April 2005 - Karen Cooley

Employers give a range of positive answers, such as the older are more reliable, but they are two-faced about it and always choose the younger person.

Older workers and jobseekers are facing difficulties holding their positions in the labour market as businesses try to project a younger, edgier image.